

Overview

Shanker Singham is one of the world's leading trade and competition lawyers and a recognized author and adviser to governments and companies. A US and UK citizen, he was educated first at St. Paul's School, London, before going on to receive an M.A in Chemistry from Balliol College, Oxford University. Following that, he took postgraduate legal degrees in both the UK and US at the Guildford College of Law and University of Miami Law School.

During his time at leading law firms CMS, Steel Hector and Davis, and Squire Sanders, Shanker worked on the privatization of the UK electricity market, the transition of the Soviet, Central and Eastern European economies and the apertura in Latin America. He has worked on the accession of Poland and Hungary to the EU, the WTO accessions of a number of countries, including China and Russia. He built the Latin American trade practice of Steel Hector and Davis in Miami, and led the market access practices of Steel Hector and Davis in Miami, and Squire Sanders in Washington, DC.

While forging this successful 20 year law career in the US, Shanker also authored the leading academic text book on the subject of trade, competition and regulatory frameworks, as well as lecturing and writing extensively, with over one hundred articles and book chapters to his name.

He has been featured in various articles and media publications drawing on his expertise in the fields of trade and competition. More recently and drawing on his years of experience, Shanker has developed work in the field of reducing barriers to free trade on a global basis. Called Anti-Competitive Market Distortions, this work examines how barriers can destroy wealth and lead to poverty, and what can be done to prevent this.

Shanker has also begun work on identifying and measuring international inhibitors to entrepreneurship, while also examining the successful creation of the preconditions necessary for individuals to succeed.

He is the founder of the International Roundtable on Trade and Competition (1997), the Competitiveness and Enterprise Cities Project ("CECP") (2013), a specialist advisor to the UK House of Commons Committee on International Trade (2017) and a member of the International Advisory Council of the Global Trade Professionals Alliance (2017).

Shanker is now the Director of Economics and Prosperity Studies at the Legatum Institute and Chairman of the Legatum Institute Special Trade Commission

In 1997, Shanker founded the non-profit organisation Roundtable on Trade and Competition. This was intended as a way of promoting the notion of free trade, competitive markets and property rights protection around the world, following the openings in the former Soviet sphere, Latin America, and China and India's re-insertion into the global economy.

Between 1997 and 2005, he chaired the International Roundtable on Trade and Competition which hosted an annual meeting in Miami for the heads of competition agencies in Latin America, as well as other government ministries. Between 2005 and 2008, the Roundtable hosted a meeting in Singapore for Asian competition agencies.

From 1997 to 2003, Shanker was an issue leader for the Free Trade Area of the Americas ABF negotiations on behalf of the Florida FTAA, a public-private partnership initiated by the State of Florida to promote hemispheric trade integration.

From 2003, Shanker served as a Non-Government Advisor to the International Competition Network from 2003 to the present, and was one of its earliest proponents.

He has also been a senior trade and economics adviser to a number of political candidates including Democratic Governors Lawton Chiles and Buddy McKay of Florida as well as Governor Mitt Romney's Presidential campaigns in 2008 and 2012, and the Presidential campaign of Senator Marco Rubio in 2016.

Shanker has worked with governments and multi-national companies on trade, competition and regulatory issues in fifty countries around the world, across his career.

External Quotes and Media

Rob Portman, former US Trade Representative, said of Shanker's 2007 academic text book, "A General Theory of Trade and Competition is an important contribution to the understanding of global trade. By going back to first principles, Shanker Singham takes us back to the original purposes of free trade and competitive markets, helping to explain the benefits of free trade. It is an important book for trade specialists and policymakers."

In December, 2012, the Australian Newspaper described Shanker as a “trade crusader sought to recast trade barriers through a competition lens, and thus promote policy that lifts the world’s poor.”

In 2012, at a Henry Jackson Society event, at which Shanker spoke, Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, Conservative MP and former shadow trade spokesman said “I can think of nobody more knowledgeable on trade issues than Shanker.”

In February, 2017, Michael Gove on Radio 4 said “I’ve been impressed by work that has been done by Shanker Singham of the Legatum Institute [a think tank] who is probably at the moment in Britain the leading expert on trade deals, and he’s pointed out that it would be possible for Britain to conclude a deal not just with America but with other countries like New Zealand, whose prime minister was here recently ... Shanker Singham has concluded that such a deal could increase Britain’s GDP and jobs and growth significantly. There are some experts whom one does not automatically follow, but I’m inclined to believe that Shanker Singham and the work the Legatum Institute has done points the way to a successful trade relationship between Britain and other countries.”

Kerry Healey, President of Babson College, and former Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts under Governor Mitt Romney and a senior advisor to both his Presidential campaigns has said “I believe Shanker is the most brilliant conservative economist of our generation.”

Former United States under-secretary of state for international trade, Francisco Sanchez said, “Shanker Singham is one of the world's top trade experts. His thoughtful analysis of trade distortions has served governments in developing policies that support free trade. He has committed his entire career to promoting and supporting economic growth through trade. Those of us who have sought his advice are fortunate to have had his wise counsel.”

Former Federal Trade Commission Director Alden Abbott said, “Shanker Singham is a visionary. He brings to bear his wide experience in privatization of state-owned industries, trade law, and antitrust in developing a framework for the assessment of state-imposed barriers that prevent the realization of the benefits of liberalized trade. His unique knowledge set, reform vision, and entrepreneurial spirit make him the leading proponent of the effort to raise global welfare by uniting market-oriented approaches to trade and competition law and policy.”

Shanker is regularly quoted on issues of trade, competition, regulatory systems and their ability to lift the poor out of poverty. Examples include:

"The train of trade in the 21st century is different, but we insist on driving that train on the old lines. Instead we must change the lines, and develop a new architecture to frame the real trade issues of the day. That architecture must now find a way of harnessing the very real mercantilist impulse in nations, which has always been with us, to ratchet down internal barriers, distortions, and anticompetitive practices." - Bloomberg BusinessWeek, August 13, 2008

"Free trade was supposed to open entire new markets to goods and services from other countries. It was supposed to fuel competition, lower prices and increase choice for consumers. But free trade does not work if the market is rigged against competition." - The Financial Times, October 15, 2012

"I soon learned that if you just open to trade at the border but don't at the same time open the competition inside and improve the rule of law, then you just gift the boundary to gate keepers, enrich rent seekers and create a backlash against the whole process, resulting in a hostile electorate...A result, he says, is that 'people say the whole thing is bad, that liberalising trade is bad. They don't say, 'it is supposed to be good for me, let's fix domestic liberalisation to make sure we get the benefit of free trade'." - The Australian, December 6, 2012.

Key areas of work: Anti-Competitive Market Distortion Developments

In 2007, Shanker's academic text book A General Theory of Trade and Competition: Trade Liberalisation and Competitive Markets identified Anti-Competitive Market Distortions (ACMDs) as a threat to the global economic system. He further developed the principles of Anti-Competitive Market Distortions in his work with Alden Abbott, at the time Deputy Director in the Office of International Affairs, as well as his various reports in association with the Council on Foreign Relations.

This text sought to refute the argument that free trade benefits the rich and hurts the rest and that it's a zero sum game, which had begun to prevail all over the world. In this book, Shanker, sought to develop a metric to express the welfare losses that result in Anti-Competitive Market Distortions and began the research which he continues in his work at the Legatum Institute.

This work has been noted in leading media. Following this publication, in a report published by The Australian Singham was described as a "trade crusader" who has sought to recast trade barriers through a competition lens, and thus promote policy that lifts the world's poor. He noted the purpose of trade liberalization however, is to enhance consumer welfare and ultimately make the global supply chain more efficient - hence lifting people from poverty.

The Rushford Report confirmed that the "most innovative representatives of American business — think of IBM, Microsoft, GE, Google, FedEx, UPS, US health care and medical device providers, telecommunications innovators, the Silicon Valley, Boston's Route 128, and North Carolina's Research Triangle — are being ripped off, big time. So are their counterparts in Europe and important trading countries including Australia, Singapore, and New Zealand.” The article goes on to quote Singham as asserting that “trillions of dollars are being sucked out of the global economy by such market-distorting, anti-competitive regulatory practices. This is why negotiating market-oriented competition reforms are so important.”

Shanker has continued to develop this area, including in a report for the Council on Foreign Relations (2011), in the Introduction to Anti-Competitive Market Distortions Methodology (Legatum Institute, 2016), and in the development of a Distortions Index. He is the lead author of the SRB methodology to review distortions (after a paper with co-authors, U. Srinivasa Rangan, and Robert F. Bradley for the World Bank and OECD on Distortions).

Key areas of work: Enterprise Cities

He is the founder of the concept of Enterprise Cities.

Enterprise Cities are established by governments willing to give authority to a new entity comprised of a public private partnership of government officials, experts, and developers who together create a new regulatory system that delivers a pro-competitive business environment based on open trade, competitive markets and property rights protection.

Enterprise cities are beneficial for countries as they include a revenue share with the Host Government that manages this special zone, as well as employment benefits for the local population and wealth generating effects brought about by the Enterprise City. The governance and economic framework is powered by the Competitiveness and Enterprise Cities Project in these areas to deliver an overall environment which seeks to maximize the creation of prosperity.

A successful implementation of an Enterprise City will demonstrate principles behind how economies and societies can best be organized, showing how wealth is created for the society as a whole when government distortions and other road blocks to economic activity are eliminated.

The idea of Enterprise Cities emerged from the recognition that governments were finding that national level reform was getting much harder to effect, because partial reform (without dealing properly with ACMDs behind the border) had meant that the beneficiaries of these barriers were politically powerful and could thwart reform processes, especially structural reform issues. Enterprise Cities are a way for governments to effect these types of reforms in a greenfield site, and demonstrate the economic benefits of reform, thus paving the way to reform at a national level. It is therefore an alternative delivery mechanism for reform, and for development.
